ROSIE & LAURA:

Hi!

For the last four years since we met you, what has happened with Coming Up Rosies? It's gotten bigger for sure since before we met Grant Thornton. We're like small, very small. And a little like, trying to get out there.

Yeah.

And having a little bit of trouble with that. But during our, like, process of partnership with Grant Thornton, it made everything so much better.

That's amazing.

I know you've done some other like sort of special things. Hehe. I think, as I recall, I've read your book. Yes. Can you tell us a little bit about your book?

So my mom, made a book and it's a children's book that was illustrated. We could give it to hospitals and kids can read it and just people who wanted to be more informed about alopecia and Coming Up Rosies and my journey.

So, Rosie, I know you became even more famous when you went on the cover of Scholastic magazine, which goes to kids in schools all over the US.

Yeah.

Can you tell me a little bit about that experience? I cannot believe it. Like I said, I would have never thought this would have come to this. And I am happy to be a role model. And most of all, I want to make sure that I set a good example and to I just feel so like special because I got to do this.

I have this opportunity and I hope that these kids can get a message out of this that it's okay to be different. It's okay to like, be yourself.

Okay. Rosie, after all of this, if people, I'm sure, are going to want to get involved and help your organization, How can they do that?

So they can go directly to cominguprosie.com. You can also reach out to us as our contact info there. You can join in on our socials because we're definitely posting more about what we're doing.

Great. And I know really at the end of the day, then everyone can really help kids feel really proud of themselves.

I'm Rosie Quinn, and I'm becoming unstoppable.
